

A Sherlockian Toast (posted 2020-4-10)

Holmes looked around him with curiosity
At a museum that would soon house quite an atrocity
For standing between our villain and riches was the Hans Sloane of his age
And when Sherlock Holmes stopped this ploy, Evans flew into a rage
Wounding our good doctor, he tried to escape with a dive
If Evans had killed Watson, he wouldn't have made it out alive
Of course Holmes stopped the fiend, but because of his devious task
Watson and we see the loyalty that lay behind Holmes's cold mask
Watson says it was worth many wounds and all of their included aching
To see those clear, hard eyes dimmed and firm lips a' shaking
So raise your glasses tonight before we all depart
To toast the man that was not just a great brain, but also a great heart
